Sam and Sam, who hadn't seen each other since overseas days, met in the street and, after partially strangling each other by way of greeting, began getting personal.

"Married?" asked Sam.
"Yep," replied Sam. "You?"
"Nope," answered Sam. "You're a tucky dog. Tain't good for a man to live alone."

"No-o-o," drawled Sam somewhat jocosely. "Probably not, but some-times I'd be willing to try it."

"If you feel that way, why did you propose to the woman?"
"I didn't. She proposed to me."

"But you could have refused her."

"No, I couldn't. She said 'I'll marry me? Have you any objection?' So whether I'd said 'Yes' or 'No,' she had me either way."

"Well, you shouldn't have answered her."

"I didn't, so she said. 'Silence gives consent,' and that settled it."

It is perhaps better to give yourself away than to be sold.

GETS CLOCK, BUT NOT "TIME"

Court Robbed of Imposing Timepiece Under its Very Eyes and With Its Permission.

Thousands of law-breakers have been given "time" at Berlin's central criminal court in Mosbit, but recently an ingenious crook posing as a repair man actually was given the court's official clock and that while a case was being tried.

The sitting was well under way when a man in working clothes entered the courtroom with a long ladder which he calmly placed under the huge, imposing timepiece on the wall. The judge, counsel, accused and spectators were astonished as such an unprecedented interruption. The president stopped the workman's ascent of his ladder long enough to inquire the meaning of his conduct. The visitor explained that he merely wanted to get the clock for repair and that it would take only a moment. The president objected, but consented when the man said he already had called six times and always found the court in session. The vacant space on the wall surprised the janitor later in the day, and his investigations revealed that the clock had been robbed under its very eyes, in fact, with its permission.

DON'T OBSERVE 8-HOUR DAY

Law is No Longer Popular With Workmen in Hamburg, Germany, Says Writer.

Keener competition is causing a decided swing away from many post-war pet ideas in Germany. Even the eight-hour law is no longer popular. Frederick Simpich writes in Our World. The labor inspection bureau in a recent report pictures the trouble its enforcement is bringing as Hamburg's economic condition improved. Employers complain that laborers of both sexes, after an eight-hour day, undertake to do outside work for other people—which cuts down their efficiency on their regular job. Workers, on the other hand, consider it an interference with their personal liberty if their employers try to hold them to the eight-hour plan. Although the law was passed to safeguard the health of the workers, they appear to have lost sight of its real intention, and the authorities show reluctance to prosecute cases of its violation. In the hotels and cafes, especially, it has been difficult to enforce the eight-hour day; waiters are loath to give up their chances for more tips during overtime.

Compensation for Divinity.
Little brother was going through the "bear under the bed" stage and disclosed so much curiosity concerning the habits of those interesting animals that when bedtime came mother was always careful to guide the talk into other channels. Tonight prayers had been said and the conversation was all about God.

"Mother," he asked suddenly, "did God make bears?"
"Why, yes, dear."
"Well, then, would a bear bite God?"
"Oh, no," she answered him "stiffly."
"Gosh!" said the small boy fervently. "I wish I was God!"

ASSYRIANS NOT SO ROUGH

Were More Humane Than Popularly Fabled, Says Professor Who Has Studied Their Laws.

The Assyrian is popularly recalled as coming down "like a wolf on the fold." But one provision of the Assyrian code of laws indicates that the Assyrians are more humane than they are popularly fabled. This requires that the destitute widow be supported by her sons "as the bride whom one loves."

Instead of the Assyrians being wholly abject, their letters, says Prof. A. F. Olmstead, of the University of Illinois, show high officials speaking their minds with the greatest plainness, the kings making pathetic appeals to those whose support they would win. Their imperial free cities were as free as those in western Europe in the Middle Ages, with charters of freedom from corners of the earth and to all tongues.

Back to the Grain Fields for Health

GRAPE-NUTS is a regular "three bags full" of the best food qualities of whole wheat flour and malted barley, carefully mixed and slowly baked—

To develop all their appetizing flavor,
To preserve all their wholesomeness,
And to provide nature's "broom" that keeps the digestive system quick and open.

There's not a bit of artificial sweetening in Grape-Nuts—it just ferments sweet of its own accord in the long baking.

And that enticing flavor—how good it is with good milk or cream. Fruits, too, fresh or cooked, add to the delight of a dish of Grape-Nuts, morning, noon or sundown.

It is a compact, ready-to-eat food—an cooking needed. Why not try it for tomorrow's breakfast?
